He had with him a boy alleged to have been a witness of the murder of Chief Justice, of New Orleans.

Sign. Corti said that Italy had strong claims and proofs enough to show that the authorities in New Orleans had been derelict in their duties in connection with the recent shootings.

He said that the Government authorities must be held responsible for the murder.

Sign. Corti will proceed to Rome without delay.

MUSEUM OPENS NEXT SUNDAY

Gen. Di Cesnola Announces Arrangements for Public Accommodation.

Gen. Di Cesnola, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in Central Park, has made pressing appeal for the opening of that grand treasure house of art on Sunday, and everything is in readiness.

The Museum will be a people's pleasure house now, and the doors will be thrown open free to the public Sunday and each Sunday thereafter from 10 o'clock in the afternoon till half past four in the afternoon.

Readers of THE EVENING WORLD will be particularly pleased at this consummation of the advocacy for an open museum, which began almost with the first issue, nearly four years ago.

Now the workingman, the clerk, the salesman, the shopman and the members of their families may enjoy this glorious collection of art works in paintings, bronzes, statues, jewelry and ancient curios. The schoolmen, newsmen and other workers among the folk may seek recreation here on their only weekly holiday.

Entrance may be had at the main door on the southern facade, and in addition to this, the basement doors on the east and west sides of the building will be opened for ingress and egress.

Canals, umbrellas and parasols will be checked and cared for by attendants at the entrance, for it is in the role of the museum not to allow the existence of the temptation to visitors of pointing with these things at the various exhibits, which is dangerous in a crowd—of a hole accidentally punched in a $10,000 canvas is just as bad as though done intentionally by a vandal.

Visitors are cautioned that lunch-cakes, hand-bags and the like will neither be cared for nor admitted to the building.

Children should be left at home. They could not derive any profit from a visit to the Museum, and in a crowd they would be very uncomfortable. Besides, children are constantly getting lost there, entailing much anguish to themselves, distress to their mothers and bother to the authorities.

The Museum, in the several evenings, will be opened every Sunday in the future, in the check room by THE WORLD for $2.50, was respectfully and regretfully declined yesterday by the Executive Committee because the gift was conditional on the opening of the Museum on Sunday for the purpose of the year, the Committee not having received assurances of the forthcoming of enough money in addition to this gift to insure the additional expenses for a longer time than that.

This will be made right in good time, however, and the opening of the Art Museum on Sunday is pretty well assured for the future.

It must not be forgotten, either, that tomorrow, Memorial Day, is a legal holiday, and that the doors of the temple of art will swing all day to the people, and admission will be free to all.

To-morrow THE EVENING WORLD will be printed on blue paper. Don't fail to secure a copy.

SAVED BABY DAVID'S LIFE.

An Unknown Man Caught Him When He Fell Four Stories.

Almost Miraculous Escape of a Child from an Awful Death.

Miracles are scarce nowadays, but people living on East Seventh street yesterday believe today that a miracle was performed yesterday or little David Stephenson would not now be alive.

Whether it was a miracle or otherwise, little David had a lucky escape from being dashed to death after falling from a fourth-story window to the sidewalk, a distance of thirty feet.

Little David is a foundling. Abandoned by father and mother, he was given refuge with the good Sisters of Mercy at the Foundling Asylum on Third avenue and Sixty-eighth street.

The Sisters found a home for him with Mrs. Barrett, a worthy widow, who lives on the fourth floor of the tenement at 240 East Seventy-fifth street. The widow also takes care of other children.

David is only seventeen months old and showed early indications of being able to take care of himself.

He had free away everywhere. He could talk, but he could climb, and Mrs. Barrett and the neighbors would watch the little fellow's cunning movements with delight. Once he climbed up on the sofa and from there on a table without assistance, and the neighbors said he would be great around some day. He would climb into his bed.

He did, or like this history of the Blue and Fall of Little David Stephenson would not be written.

Mrs. Barrett left little David alone for a few moments yesterday. In the middle of the room stood his high baby chair. He pushed the chair up to the window.

Then, with his usual agility, he climbed up on the chair to the window sill and began to play with the iron catch that held fast the shutter, the only barrier between him and the street, sixty feet below.

David was leaning against the shutter playing with the catch. It opened, so did the shutter.

Baby Stephenson thought that was very funny and laughed. Besides, he had more room now to stretch his little legs and continue his explorations.

His tiny feet were soon dangling outside the window.

A man in driving through the street in a car saw the child and his danger. He stopped his horse, got out, and was walking towards the house when he saw Baby Stephenson lean forward.

A whirl of tiny skirts and shrieks of women who also saw the fall filled the air.

The carter was the only one who did not lose his presence of mind, and that was the miracle that saved little David.

The man watched the baby coming and awaited him with outstretched arms. The strong arms closed upon the baby's flying form. It was a pretty heavy weight and the man staggered backward for a step or two, but baby was saved, and, more miraculously still, he was coughing and laughing, all unharmed.

The man handed the child to a boy, remounted his car and drove away. No one learned his name.

The baby was not at all frightened at his lightning journey through the air. He rather enjoyed the trip, but he became alarmed when he saw the number of people who surrounded him, and not until then did he begin to cry.

Railroad Commissioners Announce One for Next Wednesday.

The determination expressed by members of the Board of Railroad Commissioners to hold behind closed doors all their meetings to consider the best method for maintaining and improving the Fourth Avenue Railroad Tunnel has been reconsidered, and a public hearing will be held Wednesday next, June 3, in the room of the Chamber of Commerce.

The result of this move is expected to be the first step toward receiving many suggestions which they never could have heard of. They will be held in the presence of the public and each expert witness as they might choose to summon.

FOUGHT TO DROWN HERSELF.

A Young Girl Tries to Jump from the Battery Sea Wall.

She Struck and Clawed the Three Men Who Saved Her.

Amelia Beyer, a luxon, brown-eyed Bohemian girl, tried to throw herself into the water from the Battery wall this morning, and would have succeeded but for the determined efforts and superior muscles of Park Policemen Livingston and Haggardman Louis Sternman and George Gould, of the large office.

Police Officer Livingston was patrolling the Battery at 3:30 o'clock when he saw the young woman, blonde and without a coat, running along the promenade towards the water.

She Struck and Clawed the Three Men Who Saved Her.

He hurried from the opposite direction to intercept her, and she frantically buried herself off the wall.

The girl turned upon him and fought like a tigress. She tried to fasten her teeth in his hand and scratched and clawed him with her finger-nails.

Sternman and Gould had followed her when she was in the large office, and it required the strength of the three men to control her.

She was finally returned to the large office and locked in a room in the hospital.

The young woman is the same one who a month ago accused Nurse Charles Spry of criminal assault. She was charged with a patient in the hospital.

She is eighteen years old and rather pretty. She is large and as strong as an Amazon. She has been a continual source of trouble since her arrival. April 7, on the steamship since.

DEAD IN A STRANGE YARD.

Widow Bailing Supposed to Have Jumped Off a Roof.

Tenants of the flats at 1098 Second avenue were awakened this morning on finding in the yard at the rear of the house the dead body of an old woman.

None of the tenants in the house could recognize her or could remember ever having seen her.

The woman was about sixty years of age, her right leg was broken between the knee and the ankle.

Later the body was identified as that of Mrs. Mary Bailing, a widow, eighty years old, who lived at 309 East Fifth street.

Her son, Martin Bailing, said she had lived at his house for the past two years, but several weeks ago she went to Germany because her daughter had died in Bremen.

She returned yesterday on the Lahn, but was severely afflicted and disoriented. Last night she
